Scholarly Communication Workshop (9/23)

The CTRE continues its “Writing for Success” theme on September 23 with

Scholarly Communication: New Models, Services, and Engagement

This workshop will help attendees to understand the concept of scholarly communication, and how it pertains to such factors as copyright, open access, funder mandates, and more.

This workshop is particularly timely with the passing of Illinois SB 1900, “Open Access to Research Articles.”

which has changed the landscape of scholarly communication.

Stephanie Davis-Kahl and Sarah Shreeves will co-lead this workshop and help attendees to navigate new waters and thrive among them.

This workshop will take place Monday, September 23 from 10:00 to 4:00 in LIB 301.

If you would like to know more about this workshop, contact Fatemeh Asadi at 773-995-2558. To register, contact James Kowalski at jkowalski@csu.edu or 773-995-2498.

“Tolotolah: The Case of Toledo, Spain” Lecture (9/26)

By Prof. Felipe Rojas

Did you know that the footprints of the Jewish community in Spain span more than a thousand years? Both the center of a vibrant multicultural community and the home of the Spanish Inquisition, the history of the city of Toledo has been defined by a series of paradoxes. One of these is the Hebrew root of the city’s name, Tolotolah. On the one hand, the term refers to the name given to the city by Medieval Jews and Muslims. But at the same time, it is a name marking Jews as exiles by alluding to the Jewish Diaspora.
