President Scott shared the partnership with Spark Foundry, the company which offered Pro Bono $500,000 worth of services to the university through our re-branding campaign, and they offered to do more with other subsidiaries of the company.

Dr. List started by thanking Trustee Carr for his participation in the Black Media Industry weeklong programming. During the past academic year, President Scott encouraged Leo Burnett, the premier global advertising agency, to create a unique partnership with the university’s academic programs. This led to a collaboration between Leo Burnett and the Office of the Provost together with the Department of Communications, Media Arts & Theatre in the College of Arts & Sciences, and the Department of Marketing in the College of Business to launch an ambitious program to prepare students of color at CSU for high paying jobs in the advertising industry. Five black and Latinx students majoring in Media Arts participated in the program, a ten-week advertising bootcamp led by a team of professionals at Leo Burnett. The final project generated by the students would be a media campaign to attract more Latinx students to enroll at CSU. As part of this unique bootcamp experience, the students were paired with specialists in their areas of interest. Those students who aspired to create commercials were paired with the head of the production department at Leo Burnett. Students interested in media strategy were placed with a mentor in charge of public relations at Leo Burnett. This approach to learning created an incredible point of access to allow each of the five students to gain a mentor at one of the top advertising companies in the world. After completing the advertising bootcamp, three of the bootcamp students accepted paid summer internships with Leo Burnett or their sister company Spark Foundry. Happily, the other two students were immediately hired into jobs in their fields. In August, one of the three students, Malcolm Conyers, who completed the paid summer internship, was hired by Spark Foundry. He recounted his success story in an interview during the welcome week broadcast on WBEZ Radio.
