Lethal Loophole:

How the 'Clear Skies' Bill Allows
Oil Refineries and Chemical Plants to Emit More Toxic Air Pollutants

Executive Summary

The Bush administration has touted its so-called "Clear Skies" bill as a way to clean up power plant emissions of smog-forming nitrogen oxides, soot-forming sulfur dioxide, and toxic mercury. In reality, this bill would allow power plants to pollute more and longer than under the current Clean Air Act. Moreover, a just-discovered provision in the bill weakens current law for other industries as well, including pulp and paper mills, oil refineries, and chemical plants, among others. These industrial units could "opt in" to the bill and "opt out" of existing requirements to reduce their emissions of dozens of toxic air pollutants that cause cancer, birth defects, and other serious health problems.

Specifically, the "Clear Skies" bill (S.131) would exempt as many as 58,000 industrial boilers, commercial and institutional boilers, and process heaters used at industrial facilities such as pulp and paper mills, oil refineries, and chemical plants from a 2004 Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) rule that requires these units to reduce their toxic emissions to the maximum extent possible by 2007. The bill also would exempt these units from other major Clean Air Act requirements, including New Source Review and visibility protections for national parks and wilderness areas. Boilers and process heaters emit a wide variety of toxic air pollutants, depending on the fuel burned, including arsenic, benzene, chromium, hydrogen chloride, and lead, among others.

EPA has performed no analyses to date on the effects of this loophole on public health or the environment. As a first step to understand its potential implications, this report uses EPA data to estimate the number of industrial facilities in Colorado that could take advantage of the loophole and their annual emissions of toxic air pollution.

This hidden provision in the "Clear Skies" bill could exempt as many as 220 industrial facilities in Colorado from the Clean Air Act's mandate of deep reductions in toxic pollution. The industries covered by the loophole emitted almost 1.6 million pounds of toxic air pollutants into Colorado's air in 2002. The loophole would allow these industries to continue to emit harmful chemicals into Colorado's air, threatening the health of citizens across the state.

The "Clear Skies" bill has always been a bad deal for Americans and Coloradans who want to breathe clean air; this hidden loophole for many different industries makes it even worse.

Background: Reducing Toxic Pollution from Boilers and Heaters

Toxic air pollutants are known or suspected to cause cancer, birth defects, and other serious health problems. The Clean Air Act identifies 188 toxic air pollutants.

In 1990, Congress amended the Clean Air Act to require each and every major industrial source of toxic air pollution to use the "maximum achievable control technology" (MACT) to reduce toxic emissions.² In 1992, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) identified industrial boilers, commercial and institutional boilers, and process heaters as sources of toxic air pollution, and in 2004 EPA issued MACT standards to substantially reduce toxic pollution from these sources.³

Boilers and process heaters are used at facilities such as oil refineries, chemical plants, and pulp and paper mills. These facilities use process heaters to heat raw materials and boilers to burn coal and/or other substances such as wood to create steam, which is used to produce electricity or provide heat.

Boilers and process heaters emit a wide variety of toxic air pollutants, depending on the fuel burned. EPA's 2004 MACT rule regulates their emissions of arsenic, cadmium, chromium, hydrogen chloride, hydrogen fluoride, lead, manganese, mercury, nickel, and various organic hazardous air pollutants, including benzene, formaldehyde, and acetaldehyde. In terms of the health effects of these pollutants, EPA states:

"Exposure to high levels of these [hazardous air pollutants] is associated with a variety of adverse health effects. These adverse health effects include chronic health disorders (e.g., irritation of the lung, skin, and mucus membranes, effects on the central nervous system, and damage to the kidneys), and acute health disorders (e.g., lung irritation and congestion, alimentary effects such as nausea and vomiting, and effects on the kidney and central nervous system)." 5

EPA has classified arsenic, benzene, and chromium as "human carcinogens" and acetaldehyde, cadmium, formaldehyde, and lead as "probable human carcinogens."

EPA's 2004 rule is intended to reduce emissions of these pollutants from 58,000 industrial boilers, commercial and institutional boilers, and process heaters nationwide by an estimated 58,500 tons per year. Existing industrial boilers and process heaters must comply with the rule no later than September 2007; new industrial boilers and process heaters must comply when they are brought on line. Facilities can comply with the emission limits by altering their work practices in ways that reduce emissions or by installing emissions control technologies, such as fabric filters and scrubbers.⁷

The rule also will reduce emissions of sulfur dioxide (SO2) and fine particulate "soot," which contribute to serious respiratory and cardiovascular diseases and premature death, since the technologies that reduce toxic pollution also reduce SO2 and soot emissions. Specifically, EPA estimates that the rule will reduce emissions of SO2 by 113,000 tons and fine particulate soot by 159,000 tons nationwide each year.⁸

Nationally, EPA estimates that the rule could prevent 2,270 premature deaths, 6,900 hospital visits for respiratory and cardiovascular problems, 173,500 asthma attacks, and 398,700 lost work days each year.⁹

The 'Clear Skies' Bill: Loopholes for Many Industries

Senators James Inhofe and George Voinovich, the leaders of the Environment and Public Works Committee, introduced the Clear Skies Act of 2005 (S.131) in mid-January 2005. As with previous versions, the bill would cap power plant emissions of sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, and mercury but at levels weaker than required under current law. Among its most harmful provisions, the bill would delay until well after 2018 reductions in power plant sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxide emissions called for in the Clean Air Act by the end of this decade; repeal the Clean Air Act's New Source Review program, which requires the oldest and dirtiest plants to meet modern pollution control standards; force residents of heavily-polluted areas to wait longer for clean air than under current law; and eliminate protections that would require every power plant to reduce mercury to the maximum extent (about 90 percent) by 2008.

Tucked away in S.131 is an additional loophole that would exempt non-utility industrial units from EPA rules to reduce toxic air pollution. As introduced, the loophole applied to four broad categories of industrial facilities – all with stringent MACT standards on the books. On February 22, Senators Inhofe and Voinovich filed an amendment to their bill to limit the exemption to industrial boilers, commercial and institutional boilers, and process heaters, which is by far the largest of the four industrial categories. The committee has not yet considered the amendment.

Industrial units that "opt in" to the bill's trading system for sulfur dioxide, nitrogen oxides, or mercury pollution would be exempt from EPA's rules to reduce their toxic emissions, as well as other major Clean Air Act requirements, including New Source Review and visibility protections for national parks and wilderness areas. This means that companies could, for instance, refurbish old plants without installing up-to-date pollution control technology.

EPA has performed no analyses to date on the effects of this loophole on public health or the environment. As a first step to understand its potential implications, this report uses EPA data to estimate the number of industrial facilities in Colorado that could take advantage of the loophole and their annual emissions of toxic air pollution. We conservatively limit our analysis to industrial boilers, commercial and institutional boilers, and process heaters, though S.131, as introduced, extends the exemption to other industrial sources as well.

More Toxic Pollution in Colorado

S.131 would exempt as many as 220 industrial facilities in Colorado from the Clean Air Act's mandate of deep reductions in toxic pollution.¹⁴ Specifically, the bill would exempt industrial units at these facilities from 2004 EPA rules that require each and every industrial boiler, commercial and institutional boiler, and process heater to reduce its toxic pollution to the maximum extent possible by 2007. The industries covered by the loophole emitted almost 1.6 million pounds^a of toxic air pollutants into Colorado's air in 2002 (see Table 1).¹⁵ The loophole would allow these industries to continue to emit harmful chemicals into Colorado's air, threatening the health of citizens across the state. See Appendix A for a detailed list of the specific facilities in Colorado that could avoid reducing their toxic releases to the state's air.¹⁶

This number may include emissions from minor and other facilities not categorized as "major" under the Clean Air Act; this number also reflects emissions of hazardous air pollutants from the entire facility, not just the boilers or process heaters that would be exempt under the "Clear Skies" loophole discussed here. We counted point source emissions of hazardous air pollutants only.

[^] Facilities with more than one Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) code were only counted once. As a result, the total may be less than the sum of each category.

^{*} These industries are not required to report to the Toxics Release Inventory.

^a This number reflects emissions of hazardous air pollutants from the entire facility, not just the boilers or process heaters that would be exempt under the "Clear Skies" loophole discussed here.

Conclusion

The "Clear Skies" bill has always been a bad deal for Americans and Coloradans who want to breathe clean air; the bill's hidden loophole for many different industries makes it even worse. The bill eliminates cornerstones of the Clean Air Act that have reduced air pollution from power plants, oil refineries, chemical plants, and other smokestack industries for decades, jeopardizing public health and the environment.

Methodology

The national emission standards for hazardous air pollutants for industrial, commercial, and institutional boilers and process heaters applies to major facilities in the following industries: SIC 13 (extractors of crude petroleum and natural gas); SIC 24 (manufacturers of lumber and wood products); SIC 26 (pulp and paper mills); SIC 28 (chemical manufacturers); SIC 29 (petroleum refineries and manufacturers of coal products); SIC 30 (manufacturers of rubber and miscellaneous plastic products); SIC 33 (steel works, blast furnaces); SIC 34 (electroplating, plating, polishing, anodizing, and coloring); SIC 37 (manufacturers of motor vehicle parts and accessories); SIC 49 (electric, gas, and sanitary services); SIC 80 (health services); and SIC 82 (educational services).¹⁷ SIC stands for standard industrial classification.

To determine which and how many facilities could take advantage of the loophole for boilers and process heaters, we used EPA's Enforcement Compliance and History Online database and looked at major facilities permitted under the Clean Air Act that fall into one of the industries listed above. Facilities with more than one SIC code were only counted once. All data is current as of February 17, 2005.

We generated data on toxic air releases for each industry from EPA's Toxic Release Inventory, www.epa.gov/tri. We included point source emissions of hazardous air pollutants (HAPs) only. Some of these industries are not required to report to TRI, including SIC 13 (extractors of crude petroleum and natural gas), SIC 80 (health services), and SIC 82 (educational services). All data is current as of February 17, 2005.
